It is clear that all three quantities that we are interested in (the disk surface density, the disk size and the outer disk mass) decrease steeply with radius in the best fitting models. The observed correlation between observed sizes and surface densities, as well as the inferred depletion of disk mass at very large radii, are therefore a useful test of our models. For both and the drop in disk mass at very large radii is statistically significant, while for this is true only for the cold gas. This is perhaps not surprising, since the cold gas mass in the model starts to dominate the total disk mass very early, before the epoch of strong stellar feedback. In principle, the drop in disk mass at large radii may appear to conflict with the observations by Urquhart et al f30f4ceada
